LIBERAL ARTS ARE THRIVING AT SOUTHWESTERN

There is an unmistakable feeling of momentum across campus. We opened our 183rd academic year with one of our largest incoming classes and also one of our most selective. We recently celebrated an $80 million bond issuance—retaining our Moody’s A rating—that will fund transformative building projects totaling $120 million, including two new residence halls to house our growing student numbers and an athletics complex that will bring football back to campus for the first time in 75 years.

All of this is taking place in the fastest-growing city in America that is part of the next Silicon Valley. With companies like Apple, Google, Samsung, Dell, and Tesla just minutes away, Southwestern is part of a dynamic economy that will define a liberal arts education for the 21st century.
